The Turks when describing a Greek girl say that she is kneaded up with tricks. They ought to know, for in the balmy days of the harems those justitutions contained many a young lady from the Ægean isle, bought by agreement with her kinsfolk; and doubtless so late as two years ago the Turkish girl-merchant paid his yearly visits to Cyprus. His ostensible purpose was to recruit dancing girls, for the word slavery was not to be so much as mentioned among the Greeks; but it was praity well understood that when a young ty well understood that when a young Cypriot woman accepted an offer to 20 and dance at Constantinople or Bagdad her relatives saw no more of her unless she turned up in after years as a
